

The Jaguarundi

Hello, I am a Jaguarundi. I live in a nearby desert but sometimes I travel to the savanna and dry woodlands and rainforests. My predators are bobcats, lions, cougars, and domestic dogs. Our prey are birds, rabbits, and small rodents.

Texas.gov says, my Jaguarundi appearance is I have a flat triangular head with short, strong legs. I look like a weasel in Mexico. Sometimes people call me “other cat.”

I have the lowest conservation status of all animals. There are only 3,200 of us left! It has the lowest number of the cat species. Me and my family Jaguarundi are endangered because of poaching and predators. The scientists are helping the production of the Jaguarundi. So that is why you should help the Jaguarundi too. You can help by donating money to Endangered.org.

Sources:

Endangered.org

Texas.gov

Nationalgeographickids.org