

Ocelot Endangerment

I chose the ocelot as my endangered species because they have some interesting facts. For example, they have strong eyesight, and hearing, they are nocturnal and they are picky eaters.

Ocelots are endangered because they lost of habitats and people are hunting for fur and pet trade. They are important to the ecosystem because they keep everything in check. It helps because keeps the small animals and bird population at a healthy level and keeps everything at a healthy and safe level.

Ocelots have very great eyesight and hearing. They have the power to see things that people won't be able to in the wild. They are able to hear things that people won't be able to, but people are ruining their lives. People are hunting them because of how the ocelots hunt during the night. They are nocturnal which means they hunt at night. They used to go swimming to go hunt for fish or they climbed to catch birds. People like how they look and want to make them into clothing or rugs. People describe them as medium-sized spotted cats with beautiful fur and eyes.

Ocelot only eats small animals but the number of food is decreasing because of humans. People are growing in numbers and making houses out of the land that the small animals use for their homes. Because of the food that is decreasing Ocelots are left without food and they are not able to consume anything. Another thing is that ocelots are really delicate with their meals, it is proven that ocelots remove fur and feathers from their prey before they eat it.

The ocelot will possibly become extinct in the future because of our actions. People need to learn how to take care of these animals and the environment that is around us for the animals that are also impacted. We need to come together to protect the animals for future generations.
