

One Awesome Panda

If you see a giant creature munching on bamboo, it's a panda! These adorable pandas absorb my mind. They are as sweet as a kitten! There are two reasons why I like them. Read on to find out more about this mind-absorbing creature.

To begin, Pandas are endangered because they used to live in the forest, but soon there were roads being built, so that pandas have fewer places to live, then they ran out of food, and these pandas became lame. If they don't have enough food, the pandas will be weak and they won't be able to walk with grace. Instead, they would walk like an amateur. So people think these pandas should be adopted. This is why you probably only find them munching on bamboo in a panda zoo.

Next, I think pandas are important because while they roam around in forests, the seeds stick to the pandas, and they spread seeds around the forest. And when the seeds are spread, they grow trees. When trees are grown, the scrumptious fruit falls down. Inside the fruit, there are even more seeds. When the seeds are planted, they grow new trees, and the cycle continues. All thanks to the pandas!

Pandas currently live in mountain ranges somewhere in China. They can live in other places too, like Sichuan and Shaanxi. Close to one thousand, eight hundred fifty pandas are still living in the wilderness. As estimated, three hundred pandas now live in captivity.

It is tiresome to just walk around all day, but when you see a graceful panda, It is not so tiresome. So when I see one, my mind has to make space for that wonderful memory!

Below is a picture of some giant pandas:

It looks like these three are playing! I would want to stare at these cuties for more than an hour! These pandas are so cute!